Thunderstorm Indirect Cause of Death of Oldest Tinley Park Inhabitant

A thunderstorm last Friday morning was the indirect cause of the death of Mrs. Mary Wyman, 89 years old, the oldest inhabitant of Tinley Park.

During the early morning hours a thunderstorm came up and while Mrs. Wyman was trying to close an upstairs window she was either blinded by a flash of lightning or made a misstep which caused her to fall down stairs.

Her son H. W. Wyman with whom she was making her home heard the fall and was the first to reach his mother's side. She was unconscious and died within a few minutes before Dr. R. H. Carmichael who had been summoned, could arrive.

Mrs. Wyman was a native of Luxembourg, Germany where she was born February 6, 1845. In 1869 she immigrated from Luxembourg to Tinley Park and resided here ever since. Shortly after coming to Tinley Park which then was open farming country, she was united in marriage with Henry Wyman who died Jan. 21, 1884.

Aside from being the oldest resident of Tinley Park, Mrs. Wyman was the oldest church member of the Zion Lutheran church, and was a widow for over fifty years.

Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. J. C. Funk of Tinley Park and one son, Henry W. Wyman, assistant auditor for the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, also of Tinley Park and three grand children.

Mrs. Wyman was in good health, despite her advanced age was well known to neighbors for her recollections of incidents in early Chicago history, including the great Chicago fire.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon from the late home to the Zion Lutheran church. The edifice was thronged beyond capacity by the hundreds of people who came to pay their final tributes of respect. Rev. Albert Buddenhagen officiated at a very impressive service. Mrs. John Boyer and Mrs. Harry Mager sang a number of selections. Burial was in the Tinley Park Cemetery.

Mokena Loses

To Homer

Mokena lost another game to Homer on Sunday by a score of 2 to 0. This was without a doubt the best game of the year. There was never so much tension and strain in a game this year as there was in this one. Mokena was first at bat with Shorty at the plate. Shorty poked one between first and second for a hit. Jimmie made a nice sacrifice hit putting Shorty on second. Brown was third man and he went down swinging for the second out. McGovney grounded out to the first baseman. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Homer came up to bat all ready to go. West was first up, grounding out. White was second up, he drove a hard fly to half center, it was too far back for West to get but Ed Walsh came running in hard to make the catch. He caught the ball on a shoestring catch and rolled right on over on his head and came up with the second out in his left hand. Bengston was third man and he fanned the air for number three. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Mokena played hard to score but just couldn't get a break. Homer scored two runs in the fourth and were held there for the rest of the game. Bill Muehler was trying to play the second inning by himself. Waldvogel grounded out to first, McCahley grounded out to first, Seper grounded out to first.

McGovney made the error on which a run was scored. Then Pat hit a man scoring another. Pat made up for his bad luck by getting ten strikeouts after it happened. McGovney made up for his error by grabbing down some hot grounders. Well the Mokena boys had some tough sledding but they will do better on the return game.

Driving on Wrong Side Cause of A Serious Collision

Sunday about mid-night a Pontiac coupe driven by Mr. O'Neill of Pittsburgh, Pa., a representative of the Kelvinator Refrigerator Co., had a narrow escape from death when he crashed into another car which was driven by a Harvey man on the wrong side of the road.

The accident happened on 143rd street west of Orland near the Orland Soldier Camp. The Harvey man did not see the oncoming car until he was on the crest of the hill and had no time to swing over. The Pontiac coupe was hurled 500 feet by the sudden impact, but luckily the steel body prevented the top from crushing and the shattered proof glass held so Mr. O'Neill escaped with only a few bruises. Both cars were badly damaged and were towed to the Zerbs garage in Orland Park. Mr. O'Neill was on his way to Bloomington when the crash occurred. The Harvey man also escaped injury.

McLaughlin, director of the state department of agriculture. Mr. McLaughlin is chairman of the state agricultural conciliatory committee appointed by Governor Horner to supervise his farm relief program. Ames, Jr., announced that during May grocers led 63 classes of retailers to pay $395,068 of the $2,907,353 received by the state. Other large payments were by department stores, $247,727; general merchandise stores, $168,171; motor vehicle dealers, $196,857; filling stations, $149,730; restaurants, $173,690; coal, wood and ice dealers, $106,554; and drug stores, $125,760. In an appeal to voters in Illinois to approve the calling of a constitutional convention at the November 6 election, Gov. Henry Horner said that only by revising the state constitution can laws be enacted to reduce the cost of government and levy equitable taxes. The governor has been urged to call a special session of the legislature to submit an amendment to the present constitution limiting taxes on real property to 1 per cent or 1½ per cent of its market value. The effect of such limitation at this time, according to the governor and a report recently issued by the state tax commission, would be to throw local governments in the state into financial chaos. "I heartily favor reducing taxes to the lowest possible minimum that will produce necessary revenues for efficient government," said Governor Horner. "But relief cannot be obtained by the arbitrary amendment (tax rate limitation) proposed. Such a course would wreck local government in this state."

CHEWINK IS GRATEFUL

All is safe now Peter Rabbit. Come out and talk with me and let me tell you how grateful I am to you for saving my life."

bramble-tangle where he had been hiding. "It wasn't anything," declared Peter. "I saw Reddy and I knew you didn't, so of course I gave the alarm. You would have done the same thing for me. Do you know, Chewink, I've wondered a great deal about you."

"What have you wondered about me?" asked Chewink.

"I've wondered what family you belong to," replied Peter.

Chewink chuckled. "I belong to a big family," said he. "I belong to the Finch and Sparrow family. There are a lot of us and a good many of us don't know that Rosebreast the Grosbeak and Glory the Cardinal are members of my family."

"I didn't know it," replied Peter. "but if you say it is so I suppose it must be so. It is easier to believe than that you are related to the Sparrows."

"Nevertheless I am," retorted Chewink.

"What were you scratching for when I first saw you?" asked Peter.

"Oh, worms and bugs that hide under the leaves," replied Chewink carelessly. "You have no idea how many of them hide under dead leaves."

"Do you eat anything else?" asked Peter.

"Berries and wild fruits in season," replied Chewink. "I'm very fond of them. They make a variety in the bill of fare."

"I've noticed that I seldom see you in a tree-top," remarked Peter.

"I like the ground better," replied

Chewink. "I spend more of my time on the ground than anywhere else."

"I suppose that means that you nest on the ground," ventured Peter.

Chewink nodded. "Of course," said he. "As a matter of fact I've got a nest in this very thicket. Mrs. Towhee is on it right now, and I suspect she is worrying and anxious to know what happened over here when you warned me about Reddy Fox. I think I must go over and set her mind at rest."

QUESTION BOX By ED WYNN ... The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Is it true that the average weight of a woman's clothing when she is dressed to go out in the evening weighs 14 ounces?

Yours truly,
N. CREDIBLE.

Answer: Yes. But that is only temporary, as a manufacturer has just announced an invention which makes shoes much lighter.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been ill and my doctor advises "chicken livers." Do you think they are healthy?

Yours truly,
EIFFEL ALLIN.

Answer: I never heard of a chicken complaining of its liver.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am very fond of flowers and have just planted an entire bed of "Saliva Bulbs" for next summer. I should like to plant another kind of flower that would make a pretty border for my "Saliva" blooms. What do you suggest?

Sincerely,
ANN ASTOR.

Answer: Inasmuch as you have an entire bed of "Saliva" why not surround it with a border of "Spittoonias"?

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a married man, have been married only three months. I am a good hardworking man, give my wife everything she asks for, lots of spending money, lots of clothes, in fact, everything. Here's what I want to know: Last night I arrived home and found my wife in another man's arms. As I give my wife everything, how do you account for me finding her kissing another man?

Yours truly,
L. M. MADD.

Answer: Inasmuch as you do so much for your wife, the only way I can account for your discovering your wife in another man's arms is that you came home sooner than she expected.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been in ill health for some time. The doctor told me to take some IRON. Do you think he advised me correctly?

Yours truly,
DELA WARE.

Answer—Your doctor's advice is very good, if taken properly. I knew a man once who was sick and his doctor told him to take some IRON. He took a stove and was arrested.

The Solitaire Bird

The solitaire (Pezophaps solitaria) was a bird allied to the dodo and formerly inhabiting Rodriguez. It became extinct about 1761. The male stood about 2 feet 9 inches high and was brownish gray in color, the female being brown with a whitish breast. The male bore a knob of bone on each wing and used this as a weapon. The solitaire was flightless. Its food consisted of seeds and leaves, and a single egg was laid in a heap of palm leaves and incubated by both parents.

MOTHER PLAYS BRIDGE

By ANNE CAMPBELL

SHE would be a better player
If she could just leave behind
All the dear domestic problems
That perplex her loving mind.
If she could forget the children
And the naughty things they did—
But that's just what she remembers!
She forgets the no-trump bid!

If she didn't have her mind on
Mrs. Johnson's lovely gown;
If she wouldn't bother listing
All the things she'll buy in town,
She would be a better player!
Now she's making up her face,
And she's sort of absent-minded
As she trumps her partner's ace!

She would be a better player!
She describes each dress that's worn!
The refreshments? She could make 'em,
And her husband laughs in scorn,
Though there's humor in his laughter
As he hears his bonny lass
When he bids "Two hearts!" say:
"Partner! You'll excuse me! . . .
I'll just pass!"

If she'd concentrate five minutes,
What a player she would be,
But she must describe her diet,
And the show she went to see.
She would be a better player,
Dad opines (and he is human!)
If she'd keep her mind on contract
And forget she is a woman!

Old Point Comfort Has Its Monster

RESORTERS at Old Point Comfort beach on the Virginia coast got a real thrill when a sea monster like the one at Loch Ness, Scotland, made its appearance. But it was only a practical joke devised by Mrs. Richard Bonn and Mrs. John M. Lewis, who are seen above with their pet.

That Body of Yours

By

JAMES W. BARTON, M. D.

The Liver and Mental Ailments

SOME years ago the superintendent of a large mental hospital discovered that a patient who had been an inmate for two years (with no sign of any change) began to improve shortly after some bad teeth were removed, and left the hospital perfectly well mentally two months later.

Immediately dentists were brought in and the removal of dead and infected teeth gave such satisfactory results that this institution attained the best record on the continent for the percentage of cures in proportion to the number of cases entering the hospital. As the underlying cause of a number of mental cases was thus shown to be due to poison in the system, nose and throat specialists were brought in who removed infected tonsils and corrected other conditions in the nose and throat, resulting in the cure of a considerable number of cases.

This superintendent went further in his efforts to remove poison from the system, by requiring the attendants to see that patients had intestinal movements daily and in some cases ordered ordinary enemas, and in other cases, high enemas, or colonic irrigations, as they are called.

A point, not fully recognized by most of us, is that one of the important jobs done by the liver is that of removing poisons from the blood. If the liver fails to do this work properly, then there is that tired, lazy feeling that is caused by any poisonous waste. Thus we speak of a lazy liver as an organ that makes us "quitters."

Dr. A. Lingjaerde, Oslo, found that disturbances of the liver were very frequent in a common type of mental ailment, and that it was due to a large extent to too much waste in the large bowel. The liver simply could not take care of this large amount of poison.

As you know the liver tries to prevent constipation by manufacturing bile and sending it down the intestine. If this bile flows freely and sends wastes out of the bowel, then naturally there will not be as much waste (poison) in the blood for the liver to remove.

If we would keep the liver active by bending exercises, forward or to the side, with knees straight, many of us would have clearer minds.

The Cheerful Temperament

"THE cheerful temperament is a priceless possession, for when all is said, happiness is alone, the greatest or highest gift of our existence; wealth cannot purchase it, nor health insure it."

These words in the Medical Practitioner by Dr. E. A. Barton are worthy of our most serious consideration, because if you have all, and have not happiness, life is really a failure.

Certainly wealth cannot purchase happiness because, to the busy individual, wealth is a source of great anxiety at all times, and to the idle individual wealth is the source of temptation and trouble.

As a matter of fact, while it cannot be said in every case that health can insure constant happiness, it can be said that real happiness cannot be insured to you without health.

We are told that "happiness depends for the most part on our inner consciousness, our outlook on life, our faith in the future, and above all, on the good companionship of our fellow men."

I believe we will all agree with this, but nevertheless our inner consciousness, our outlook on life, our faith in the future and the good companionship of our fellow men depend to a very great extent upon our health.

I have more than once quoted the saying of Chesterfield "an attack of indigestion, a sleepless night and a rainy morning will make a coward of a man who would otherwise be a hero."

The difference between the coward and the hero then was that attack of indigestion which prevented sleep, aggravated by the gloomy morning.

If you live a normal life and are in no way conscious of having a body—no headache, stomach ache, no pain anywhere, good appetite, able to go anywhere on your feet, no breathlessness as you go about, get a good night's sleep—you have life's greatest asset, life's greatest boon.

This doesn't mean that you will always be happy, or even happy most of the time, but it does mean that you have the greatest thing needed to make you happy, that is good health.

If things come into your life that cause unhappiness, good health gives you the greatest possible help in withstanding this unhappiness, because it gives you a hopeful outlook on life, a real faith in the future, and the enjoyment of the good companionship of your fellow men.

Many Animals Diseased

Many wild animals suffer from diseases similar in effect to the common distemper of dogs. Two forms of this disease at times have been serious impediments in fox farming. Tularemia, widely publicized as rabbit fever, is known to occur in a great many wild animals, including the ground squirrel, muskrat, coyote, cat, foxes, sheep and even in certain game birds. —Literary Digest.

Do YOU Know—

That wooden Indians first were introduced to the job of cigar store guardians by a man named Chichester about 1850. The sculptor was Tom Millard. They were made of white pine and considerable skill was required in the carving.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—Word has reached treasury circles in Washington indicating some fear among residents of the drouth area that the prolonged dry period and its attendant effect on conditions may cause some fresh trouble among banks. I inquired among officials of the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation concerning those conditions, and I have assurances that there is little, if any, danger of new banking difficulties. Furthermore, the officials reminded me that even if new troubles should arise nearly all of the depositors in the distress communities are protected under the bank deposit guarantee law.

In reporting these assurances I do not mean to imply that every bank in all parts of the country has insurance coverage for its depositors. But the scope of the insurance corporation membership is so broad that it is almost possible to describe it as complete coverage among the small banks. The corporation figures show that 97 per cent of all depositors whose individual accounts are less than $2,500 per person are protected by the insurance. Something like 95 per cent of all of the banks in the country are members of the insurance pool.

The significance of these figures cannot be minimized. For example, a recent bank failure in Illinois was cared for by the Deposit Insurance corporation and it paid 99 per cent of the number of depositors with a total of $125,000, a figure that was exactly half of the total deposits in the bank. That is to say that only 1 per cent of the number of depositors in the bank had accounts in excess of $5,000 each—the maximum insured under the temporary fund—but the total of these larger accounts was equal to the total deposits of the other 99 per cent of the individuals having accounts with that institution.

With respect to the fear that has been indicated in the drouth-stricken communities, it was explained that many individuals thought there would be a repetition of conditions several years ago when the small banks were unable to realize on loans and short-time credits extended in the same areas. The depression made it impossible for many borrowers to repay. The officials told me, however, that the conditions now are somewhat different. They pointed out, for example, that many of the distressed farm mortgages hitherto privately held are now in the hands of the government and that the home loan bank system has been doing the same sort of thing for owners of residences in towns and cities. This naturally has alleviated some of the stress on the local banks.

It is true, of course, that many of the banks have extended credit on what normally would be sound bases, and that the drouth and its consequent destruction of crops will cause some loans to be uncollectible at this time. But the point is that the strain is not so great as it was early in the depression and officials here generally believe that the banks will pull through with the very minimum of failures.

It is a curious coincidence, however, that this new fear of banking trouble in the drouth areas should arise at a time when the state of Nebraska is just closing out its 25-year experiment with a state bank deposit guarantee law. The Nebraska experiment was by no means successful. Its life was very short. Nevertheless, it has taken that state almost twenty years to clean up the wreckage that resulted from an attempt to insure all deposits within the limited jurisdiction of one state.

It is to be recalled that during congressional debate on the federal law much argument was advanced against enactment of the national insurance law on the basis of the failure of the numerous state attempts. The answer apparently lies in the fact that conditions in one state may be bad from an economic standpoint, or they may be bad in several states, but it is seldom that the whole United States suffers conditions of a character that result in widespread wreckage of banks. Another strength which officials of the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation see in their own law is that no attempt is made to guarantee all deposits. As heretofore said, the limit is $5,000 for any individual account. While that limitation does not protect the holders of great amounts of capital it is sufficiently high, according to the studies by the insurance corporation to provide for immediate repayment to at least 97 per cent of the individual depositors in this country.

The federal corporation has more than $400,000,000 at its command upon which it can draw immediately for payment to depositors in case of any bank failure. It is ridiculous to assume that this amount would be sufficient to meet any such debacle as occurred in 1932 and early 1933, yet it ought to be said that a great many of the banks which closed their doors during those black days would not have been so affected had there been funds available to pay off depositors in the banks that closed early in those desperate times.

There are many Washington observers who still have their fingers crossed as to success of the deposit insurance plan. They look upon it as placing a premium on unsound banking. I think no one can doubt the psychology of this guarantee in cases where bank managers really desire to be crooked. They can feel obviously that their depositors will be protected for the most part and if they "bleed" their bank the wrath of the bulk of the citizens in a community will be dissipated obviously by prompt repayment of their deposits from the federal corporation. These observers contend further that the federal law has not had an opportunity for a real test. It is their thought that a period of five years or more will be required to gain an idea of how the machinery is going to function. It is to be noted that there has been no assessment levied on the banks which are members of the pool thus far beyond the original cash contribution for the membership purchase. The test will come, therefore, when the $400,000,000 fund has been exhausted and the banks which are members of the pool must again dig up funds to replenish the larder.

Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota, a Republican independent, is on record with the Nye Predicts prediction that a New Party new political party is bound to come, and that he believes it is now gaining rapid headway. The senator was not quite specific in his declaration, however, because he gave the impression that he recognizes many of the problems confronting organization of a third party. He has shied away from campaigning for Republican regulars seeking senatorial seats this fall and to that extent has definitely put himself in the position to be active in any third party movement.

The thing which Senator Nye and other independents on the Republican side are dodging is President Roosevelt's direct action in drawing from liberal members of both Republican and Democratic affiliation. It is regarded by political students here as quite obvious that only a few of the Republican Independents ever will stay put in a party organized as they believe Mr. Roosevelt to be organizing a new party. It is the old story of new party ambitions existing in too many spots. They exist among Republicans now in the North and the Northwest and in some sections of the Middle West, and they exist among the radical wing of the Democratic party in some sections of the South and in most parts of the Middle West. But as far as Washington information goes there are few points upon which these various groups are yet able to agree.

Old line Republicans and the conservative wing of the Democratic party are paying little attention, however, to the threats of party defection. Those with whom I have talked apparently rely on history as the basis for the conclusion that the current political uprising will die down in due time.

Many "efficiency experts" are appearing in the New Deal governmental agencies and the Federal Clerks heads of clerks are Lose Jobs beginning to fall. The process of separating workers from the federal payroll always is a difficult proposition and so the efficiency experts are moving very slowly. But authentic reports indicate there will be a sharp reduction in the government payroll shortly after election. It seems possible that a few will join the ranks of the unemployed even before election but the number is likely to be inconsequential according to the information I have obtained.

The appearance of the efficiency boys, however, has started many Washington correspondents on the trail of something deeper. While none of them, as far as I know, have been able to learn definite and irrefutable information as to plans, there is no doubt in their minds that the payroll reduction presages something in the way of tax legislation in the next congress. How far it will go or what new taxation methods may result, it is of course, too early to tell.

One of the best proofs of this is the recent statement by Senator Carter Glass, the Virginia Democrat who so long has been an outstanding figure in the senate on financial questions. Senator Glass said in a speech, and said it with emphasis, that "there is a pay day coming." He amplified his remark only to the extent of saying that the tremendous rate of spending eventually has to be checked and that if the credit of the federal government is to be maintained, provision for retirement of the great public debt—now in excess of $28,000,000,000—must be made very soon.

It is this question of expenditure that is causing alarm among so many business interests and Senator Glass called attention to that. Unless congress resorts to a sales tax of a general character, it is obvious that business must carry the brunt of the tax burden. The sentiment of the last congress and several prior to that one has been directly opposed to the sales tax. Tax legislation appears certain to be a bone of hot contention in the next congress.

Up-to-Date Ideas for Decorating Rough Wall

In the summertime persons who delight in having living quarters totally different from those occupied during the winter, often prefer to have their cottages unplastered. And there are other families who find the cost of the plain board walls so much less than plastered, that for economical reasons the walls are left in this unfinished state. But in neither instance does it mean that the walls are left bare. It simply signifies that the treatment is in accord with the scheme of the interior finish.

The spaces between beams offer excellent opportunities for wall hangings of a crude type. There are fascinating Mexican fiber and grass pieces of charming crudeness, yet with genuine artistic feeling which are well suited to some homes of the kind described. Also there are hangings of homespun linen, heavy, and coarse, on which designs are done in coarse cotton, and braid and tape are also introduced for latticed flower pots, baskets, etc., from which the broadly worked stalks, foliage, and flowers are growing or standing out gaily. Burlap in natural color could be used for the foundation, should the home decorator decide to make such a wall hanging.

Play bills, and travel posters are often sufficiently artistic to be attractive decoration for unplastered beamed walls. These travel posters may be from a collection made during trips abroad or across the country, or they may be from some tourists' agency. For seashore cottages, posters of huge ocean liners plowing their way through the waves are appropriate and, with the bright colors in which they are portrayed, they make brilliant spots of color on dull wood walls.

Persons who have a fondness for the theater can sometimes get hold of theatrical posters, or play bills, as they are termed. Some of these are artistic, some are merely striking, but all give a flavor of the stage to the simple shack.

Shelves fitted in between the upright beams of an unfinished wall supply places for books and ornaments. If these latter are well chosen to suit the cottage idea they give a cozy look, while books always are inviting and welcoming. Old china and pottery have a peculiar charm for these interiors, which should be kept simple but which should also be livened up by the wall schemes.

Heat Values of Wood

Although wood is only 60 per cent as efficient as coal, certain woods have high heating values which are not fully recognized by many people, according to T. E. Shaw, extension forester of Purdue university. Assuming 90 cubic feet of solid wood in a standard cord, 4 feet high, 4 feet wide and 8 feet long, he points out that a cord of seasoned hickory will give out as much heat as a ton of average coal. Oak will produce almost as much heat as hickory, those of the white oak group being most efficient. Other good fuel woods are hard maple, beech, elm, hackberry and ash.

Dogwood is very desirable for use in open fireplaces on account of its attractive blue flame, and it is also high in heating value, ranking with the white oaks as fuel.

Split wood has a lower moisture content than pieces in the round, and therefore has a higher heating value. Part of the aversion to wood as fuel has resulted from the fact that many people use wood which is not thoroughly seasoned. Green wood may be from 5 to 20 per cent less valuable for fuel than air dry wood.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

JACQUES CARTIER NAME THAT WILL LIVE IN HISTORY

Nineteen hundred and thirty-four should not be too busy to look back 400 years and pay honor to a persistent pioneer who found his task tough and discouraging, but who kept at it. He was Jacques Cartier, hardy mariner of St. Malo, who in 1534, discovered the St. Lawrence. Like most explorers of his time he thought he was entering the back door to China. Instead he found only a cold river flowing past mighty mountains and bordered by a wilderness in which gold, jewels and spices were distressingly absent.

But he did establish his fame as first to reach Canada: It is probable that other skippers of Brittany, unknown to fame, had landed on the shores of the St. Lawrence estuary before him. The cod fisheries in that region had long been a flourishing industry. But Cartier bore a king's warrant. Francis I was peeved because Spain and Portugal were operating the exploring business with what would now be called a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

So he looked to Cartier to break up the monopoly. For three or four years Cartier in successive trips explored the St. Lawrence and the Saguenay, tried to establish a colony and accomplished a considerable amount of amazingly accurate charting.

But like many another pioneer he was too far ahead of his time. The kings of France had European wars on their hands. They came to look upon Canada as a cold annoyance. Cartier led, but for a long time there were few to follow. It was half a century or more before Champlain, La Salle, Marquette and others came who were to carve New France from the wilderness.

In the estimate of his generation Cartier was a failure. But a noble river and a thriving dominion is his everlasting monument.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Pimples on Face Never Could Shave

Healed by Cuticura

"Three years ago my face and arms broke out with a skin eruption that was followed by large, red pimples. They festered and went all over my face and arms. They itched and burned and I could never shave. I lost much rest at night with them.

I used about four cakes of Cuticura Soap and one and a half boxes of Cuticura Ointment and now I feel like a new man. I am completely healed." (Signed) Harry R. MOKENA

IN MEMORIAM

SEMMER-Mrs. John. In loving memory of my dear, beloved mother who departed this life, five years ago August 15, 1929.

But never out of mind.
They are cherished in the hearts of Those they leave behind.

Nixon Continues

Fight For Lower Tax

George F. Nixon, continuing his fight for lower taxes, on Thursday last week, was instrumental in having 1% constitutional tax limitation made a part of the platform on which the Republican party will take its stand at the November election.

Nixon carried his fight before the platform committee of the Republican State Central Committee and later spoke before the convention of delegates meeting in Springfield from every section of the state. The platform plank endorsing 1% limitation was unanimously adopted by the convention.

Nixon who as a Member of the Board of Appeals, ordered the 15% reduction in assessed values of all homes and who forced further reduction of values in the 1932 tax assessments, told the Springfield convention delegates that the people of the state were being taxed into pauperism. He told them that unless a definite constitutional limitation was placed on the amount of tax money that the office holding taxpayers could squander, there was no hope for the return of property values and that the further confiscation of homes would continue.

Just recently Nixon led the drive to force Governor Horner to call an immediate session of the legislature so that the people would have an opportunity to vote on 1% limitation at the November election. Despite the fact that more than 400,000 citizens petitioned the Governor direct and organizations representing a million and a half people endorsed the limitation proposal, Governor Horner refused to act.

Nixon laid the blame for the present unbearable burden of taxation directly at the door of Governor Horner.

In discussing the need for rigid economy, Nixon in his speech said: "The income of the average citizen has been cut, in the past four years, 50% or more. In disregard of this vital fact which touches every home the Democratic tax-eating machine has pyramided tax-levy until the average man faces confiscation of his home and the disappearance of the last remnants of security left to him."

Nixon's attack on Governor Horner was direct and brought rounds of applause from the assembled delegates. He charged Governor Horner with having betrayed the citizens of the state and with having disfranchised them. He said:

"The Democratic Governor of this state has betrayed the people. The mounting payrolls of the Democratic tax-eating machine have held more significance to him than the dwindling payrolls of our machine shops and industries and the welfare of our seven and a half million people."

However, this was due in part to the absence of so many mothers on vacation trips and in part to a reluctance to bring the infants out in such extremely hot weather. Twenty Millions
Now Dependent
On Government

According to a copyrighted United Press dispatch, more than seven million adult Americans are now receiving pay checks from the government.

This number also includes those who are regularly employed and also those who are receiving relief in some form. It means that at least twenty million Americans are now dependent on the government, in whole or in part, for their existence. This figure includes the families of those on the payroll.

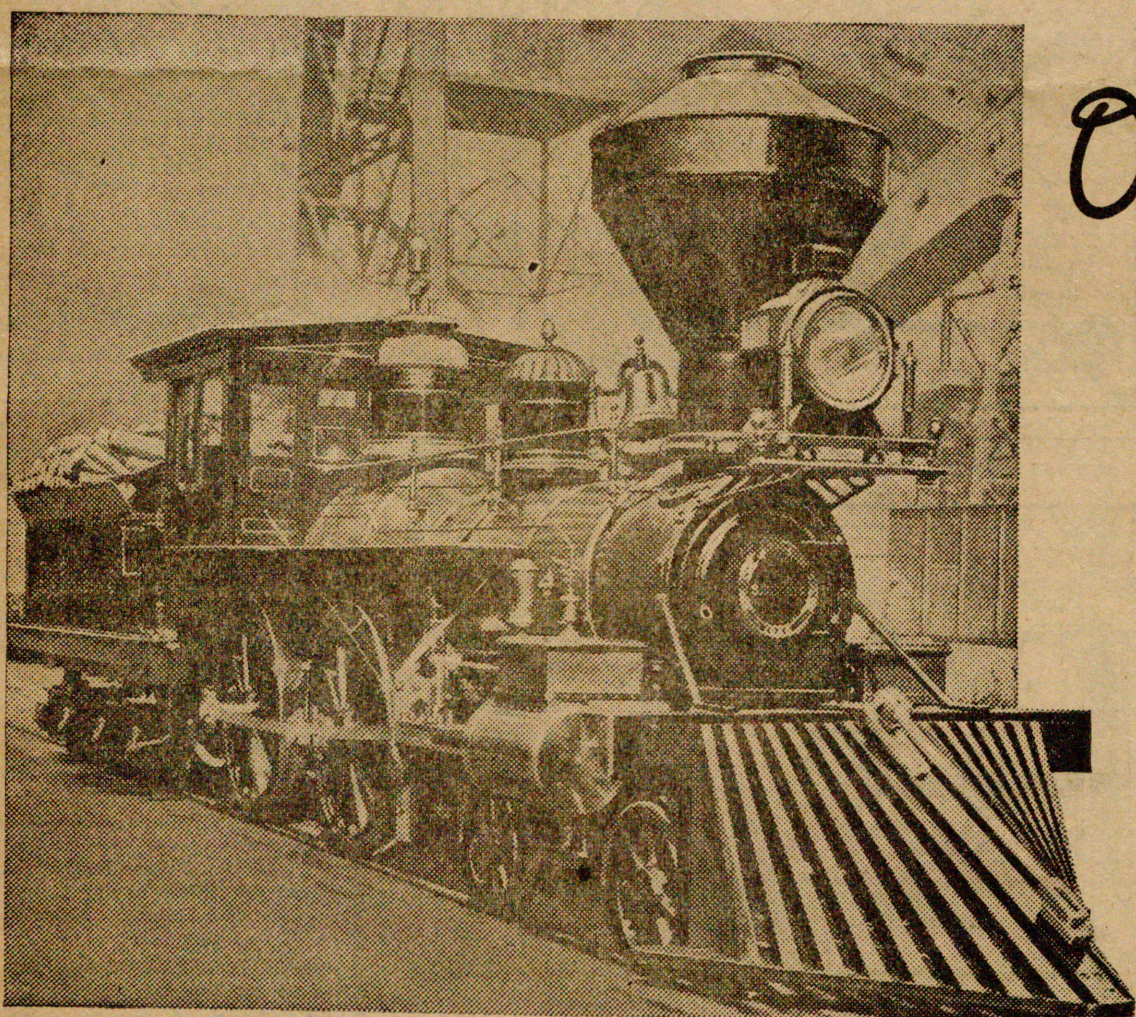

To get some idea of what this means, it might be stated that it is the equivalent of the combined populations of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit, St. Louis, Cleveland, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Buffalo. Those are the eleven largest cities in the United States and they include all that are in the million Class in population.

Lincoln said that the country could not exist half slave and half free. It would seem to be equally true that the country cannot exist for long with five-sixths of the population supporting the other sixth, especially when the government is an active competitor of the business of most of the five-sixths. One power development like that of Muscle Shoals, for example, would put from thirty to fifty thousand miners and railroad men and other affiliated workers out of their jobs.—The Murphysboro Independent.

For exhibition purposes only!

This relic of
By-gone days

Modern gas heat is fast replacing old-fashioned methods

THE snorting, puffing Iron Horse that once was the pride of the rails is now just a relic — for exhibition purposes only. The boiler that once breathed smoke and soot has grown rusty with disuse—replaced by the fast, silent, clean streamlined train. So, too, with heating systems. The old-fashioned furnace with its soot, dirt and dusty ashes is rapidly losing favor. Thousands are switching to modern gas heat. Gas heat that is automatic, efficient, free of dirt.

With gas heat you never have a worry about the furnace. No running up and down stairs to fix the fire. You fire your furnace from your easy chair by simply setting a little thermostat on the wall. And gas heat is clean. No soot. No dirt. No basement muss. The house stays clean. Curtains and walls are free of grime. And think of the comfort of a winter with no fire to bank, without wielding a shovel, without hauling a single pailful of ashes.

Investigate gas heat now. We make a startling offer so you may know the countless comforts and conveniences it will bring to your home.

We'll install gas heat at our expense, remove it at our expense, if you don't like it. We will install a burner in your present furnace or boiler at our expense. You pay the rental for the burner, which amounts to only $3 a month for the heating months in the average home. This charge is included with the bill for the gas you use. You try it for one month, two months, a year. If within a year you find that you don't like it, we'll remove it at our expense and replace your former heating equipment in good workmanlike order. But if you decide to keep gas heat—as we think you will—the rental you have paid applies on the purchase price of the equipment.

Now—while there is time before the cold weather—get the facts about low cost gas heat. Call today for details.

YOU INVEST NOTHING To Try Gas Heat!

• Gas heat can be installed without your investing one cent for equipment. To prove that every home can now afford to heat with gas, we'll install it at our expense — remove it at our expense, if you don't like it. Accept this startling offer. Phone your nearest Public Service office TODAY.

ESSENTIAL

Dreary days and uncomfortable nights might follow a cessation of your gas service.

You could, of course, live without this service but modern life would certainly be lacking in many comforts which have almost become necessities.

This important service is constantly at your command, 24 hours each day, for cooking and heating and other purposes. This service must be maintained. It has become so essentially a part of living.

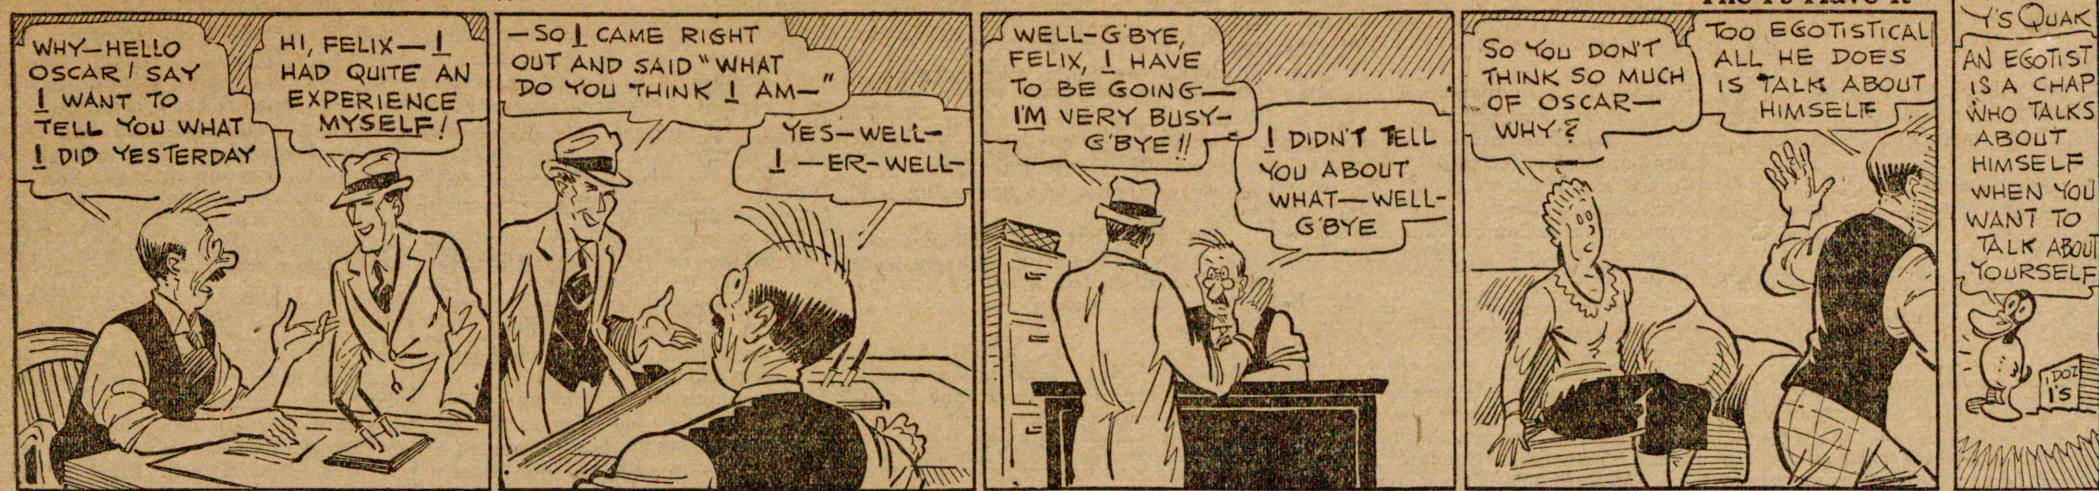

And from the standpoint of economic common sense, the price you pay for this service must cover the production and distribution of it, plus a reasonable return on the money invested to make it possible.

DESIGNED FOR VACATION DAYS

PATTERN 9059

Bother! Vacation around the corner and not enough frocks! Never mind, here is an easy way out. Select three fabrics you like in your most becoming colors. A pretty print, an ecru organdie, and a china blue crepe de chine—would that be good for you? But first, of course, order the pattern! Make the organdie with frills of ecru lace on the shoulders and use a brown ribbon for your belt. Wouldn't he like you in that of an evening? The print could be quite plain and the crepe de chine like the sketch at the left with frills of self fabric.

SYNOPSIS

Seeking death to escape dishonor at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother, her wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babe. She is engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding. Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful. Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," and vaguely connects him with her attacker. On Lone Mesa she again comes upon the strange young man. When he reiterates his sorrow over his misconduct, she indicates forgiveness and urges him to abandon his life of lawlessness. From concealment, Sonya witnesses the transference of objects from an arrow to her attacker. At a dance she demands that he tell her his name. He says he is Starr Stone, that his mother believes him dead, and that he goes by a different name in this region. He leaves the dance with a tall, fierce Mexican, with whom he is mysteriously associated. Sonya realizes she is falling in love with a man whose she can only class as a renegade and outlaw, and that she can never marry Blake. An influenza epidemic among the Indians keeps Sonya busy. She and Starr declare their love for each other, all doubt in the mind of the girl being ended.

CHAPTER VIII

Clouds of Portent.

In the hard days that followed, Sonya knew a fire of ecstasy among the dark shadows of disaster. Wherever suffering and death entered the lowly hogan, there the steady hands of Starr Stone were a bulwark and a help. They rode together in the dawns, meeting on this and that high level, and at the twilights, when they separated, she went back to the ranch, he to that mysterious limbo from which he had emerged. Where he spent his hours away from her Sonya did not know and was afraid to ask again. She only knew that his long hands were gentle as a woman's with a hungry child, holding a cup to parched lips, bathing hot dark faces with a little rag, and once he brushed and braided the black hair of a dead mahala before they buried her.

And that day Sonya wept against his shoulder for sheer misery at the tragic fate which had made of this man an outcast and a pariah.

So the hectic days passed, with little count of them and these two working together at their humble tasks. Once the girl told him, "You're no lost soul as you'd have me think. You're of that brotherhood of which Christ spoke when he said, 'If ye do it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye do it unto me.' Servers of the world." And he had made no answer.

They kissed each other now at parting, softly, as if the thing they held between them was so precious that a careless touch might destroy it utterly. To the man there was tragedy and stark sorrow in every touch of Sonya's lips, her hands, the tender brushing of her cheeks against his. He was blessed beyond all dreams, humbled beyond all imagining.

And he knew how fleeting this paradise must be, how soon life and its mandates must take him away from her forever. It was this knowledge which made the enchanted days so short, so unreal.

And by the end of that week the strain lessened. Everywhere her people were getting up from their hogan floors, thin brown shapes with big eyes in their dark faces, and no more were lying down. The epidemic was dying out. Those that were left began to be busy making new hogans before the summer should be gone, for they would not live in any house where death had been. They feared the tchindis, or ghosts of the dead, and malevolent spirits. But they looked at Sonya and Starr Stone with long looks, unfathomable looks, and sometimes a woman touched the girl's hand tentatively, or a man said some clipped, guttural word which the latter could not understand and Sonya interpreted.

"Hossteen Little Man says we are the Healing Winds." Or, "Our medicine is better medicine than Yellow Buck's."

And Yellow Buck had been very busy in all the hogans where Sonya was not, performing ceremonies, singing chants and making medicine of his own.

And now Life made ready to take its reckoning. She had lived in these rushing weeks, lived very fast, very full, known the dark of sorrow, of pity, and the light of great joy, the pleasure of good work well done. She had bloomed in the glow of such love as she had never dreamed of, what time she could spare to it, and felt as though she were richer, more vital, in all the reaches of her nature. Now, with the cessation of the sickness, she turned her eyes toward the future and what it held.

"Now," she told Starr Stone, "we'll begin to think of us."

But Starr Stone shook his head.

"If," he said, "must think of you. My reprieve is over—was over some days ago. I'll be going back—to where I belong."

But Sonya smiled. It did not occur to her that anything could be so dark and strong that she and her strength could not conquer it.

"We'll not talk of that just now," she said, "let's ride to the top of Lone Mesa. We owe it something—the mesa."

"I owe it something," he said passionately—"owe it my everlasting apologies, my undying reverence. It was there I saw creation as it was meant to be—in your white face on the cliff."

So they swung south from their trail that day and climbed the ancient path in the stark precipice.

There was the long stretch of the western edge where Darkness had fled full speed, a horse and rider at his flank. Where the wild face of a drunken man had blazed at the woman on his back with every evil passion of the soul. There was the spot where the man had pulled the slim girl from her saddle, where she had fought like a fury in his arms, where, at the last she had pulled free and flung herself, in one wild leap, over the mesa's brink. As they reined up at the great rock's edge they both sat silent, each with unspoken thoughts plain to be read.

"Sonya," said the man at last in a strangled voice, "I have no words—there is nothing I can ever say—nothing I can ever do—to wipe that memory away."

But Sonya turned and laid her hand on his, and there was a soft smile in her eyes.

"There is no need," she said.

"No need! The greatest need I'll ever know! And it can't be filled! I'll have to leave you soon, forever, with that on my conscience, on my heart!"

"Leave me? No, you will not. Not ever, Starr Stone. You are my man—from the beginning."

"The soul in my body—if I have one—will stay with you while life lasts. I hope you know that. But the body itself is another matter. I think we'll be saying good-by up here. Here where we met in—in disaster—and I want you to know, Sonya, that if there Climbed the Ancient Path in the Stark Precipice.

Is such a thing as redemption of a man's inner self, I have been redeemed by knowing you. All my instincts, all my desires, all my outlook on life itself, have changed. When I'm with you my speech, even, is changed—back to what it once was. The Border and all it has meant to me in my wildness, my devil-may-care, has lost its charm. I'd leave it—all—everything—for a different life, if I could."

"Oh, Starr," she said tremulously, "can't you tell me? Won't you tell me what it is that threatens you—us?"

"Impossible," he said quietly. "My lips are sealed—for your sake more than mine. What I know would be dangerous knowledge for you. What I have done—being with you, coming back to you against—against orders—has been a danger for you. I knew it but was too weak to go my way, never to see your face again. I could not, in this strange transition which has been taking place in me. But strength has been growing in me of late, like a great tree standing against the wind. Do you see, Sonya, what you have done for me?" he finished earnestly.

"I know," said Sonya, "I knew from the first, almost, that it would be so. That the good was in you under—under whatever it was that hid it. That some day it would come out, that the evil would fall away, leaving you as you were meant to be."

"You knew? How early? When?"

"The second time I saw you—at Two Fingers' hogan in Chee wash. I think I knew it then, dimly, when your face flushed red on seeing me. The good was struggling with the bad that minute."

"You're right. It was. And has never ceased to struggle since."

"And you're not going to go back!" cried Sonya passionately. "Not going to throw it all away! I will not let you!"

The man sighed, wet his dry lips. Then he leaned toward her and took her against his breast.

"My darling," he said gently, "please kiss me once more."

With a strangled cry Sonya threw her arms around him.

"Why? Why?" she pleaded. "Why will you not stay here and go forward with me, into life? Don't you love me?"

"Love you? My G—d; It's because I love you, adore you, worship you, that I'm taking myself out of your life before it is too late. I don't want to see you—"

"See me what?"

"Nothing. Let's go. Let's go now."

He turned Un d'Oro sharply and headed for the down trail, Darkness following close. Sonya sat rigidly in her saddle, her throat swelled painfully with the dark realization that her dream of love was done for, that this man whom she had come to love so helplessly was riding out of her life. She could not speak.

At the mesa's foot they set out across the levels which were once more darkening into a starlit night in dreary silence. And before they had said another word, before they could say that last farewell which comforts the heart bereaved, fate was upon them.

Out of the shadows of a clump of juniper four men suddenly rode across their way. Four men on good horses, clad in dark garments, their wide hats pulled low over their dark faces, guns frankly showing at their thighs. And at their head rode that huge figure of a man which had loomed on the dance floor that enchanted night and called Starr Stone as a master calls his dog.

He sat now and looked at him with black eyes burning in the gathering darkness.

"Hombre," he said again as he had said before, "three times in as many days have I sent for you, and you did not come. This is the reason."

He nodded toward Sonya.

"Yes!" cried the girl like a shot, though her voice shook. "Yes! I—and a better one. I first, and the caring for those who died, second. I am a doctor, and there has been a great sickness among my people, the Indians. This man has stood with me shoulder to shoulder in a fine thing. Together we have saved many lives. That's why he stayed." There was a note of defiance in the trembling voice.

"Oh, so that es why, senorita?" the stranger said, changing from the Spanish to broken English, "why he disobeys hees horders? For you, eh, an' for thees dirty Navys? Well, he goes now, an' don't you forget it! An' remember, Senorita Savarin, that if he comes to you, ever again, that will happen to you an' yours which will be a price. A fair price for thees insult to me, in that you keep my best lieutenant from hees work. Adios, senorita. Do not forget."

He raised his sombrero with a gallant gesture and whirled his horse away. And this time Starr Stone, following, looked long in Sonya's white face with eyes in which all the tragedy of life lay stark and awful. Then he was gone, and only the soft sound of loping horses in sand came back to her.

Until the dim shapes were lost in the night the girl sat still, listening, her mouth open, her hands on her rein cold and nerveless.

That which threatened had struck at last.

And presently she drooped forward with her face in Darkness' mane and fell to such weeping as only a heart cleaved to the quick can know.

When she rode into the patio at home an hour later a man came swiftly from the lighted doorway, his hands reaching up for hers, his face glowing with joy.

"Sonya! Dear heart!" he cried, and,

"Rod!" said Sonya before she crumpled and slid limp into his reaching arms.

"She's fainted!" he cried. "Lila—Serge—quick!"

He carried her to the door and in, laying her down on the living room couch, and Lila was at his side in a flash.

"Get me some water," she said.

But Sonya, strong creature that she was, did not need it. Her senses, reeling from grief and fear and the sudden sight of Rodney Blake, who was the last man she wanted to see in her present trouble, righted themselves swiftly. She moved, opened her eyes, sat up a bit unsteadily.

"Why, what a silly thing!" she said tremulously. "And Rod—how in the world—"

"Steady, dear," said Rod. "I just dropped in—by plane and car—from New York—Williams—got a man to bring me over. Us rather. Have a friend with me. But don't talk now. Lie down again."

"Piffle!" said Sonya. "I'm all right. A bit tired, I guess."

"She's been riding day and night for a month," said Lila, looking at Blake. "Epidemic, you know."

"Dam! Indians again," the man thought. "They'll kill her yet."

But Sonya was on her feet, stripping the kerchief from her neck, rolling back her shirt sleeves.

"I'm O. K.," she said. "I'll just go and clean up a bit."

And she walked steadily to her own room.

Inside its shielding door she clasped her hands together, stood a long moment staring into the darkness. The fight of life which she had visioned, of which she had spoken to Starr Stone, was on, and she had lost the first battle—to that black force across the Border.

With a strangled cry Sonya threw her arms around him.

"Why? Why?" she pleaded. "Why will you not stay here and go forward with me, into life? Don't you love me?"

"Love you? My G—d; It's because I love you, adore you, worship you, that I'm taking myself out of your life before it is too late. I don't want to see you—"

Old Roman Funerals

The old Romans had elaborate funeral ceremonies. If warranted by rank of the deceased, the procession passed through the Forum, and an oration was there pronounced.

AMOS DENOUNCES SELF-INDULGENCE

(Temperance Lesson.)

LESSON TEXT—Amos 6:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live; and so the Lord, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken, Amos 5:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When People Are Selfish.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Amos' Famous Sermon.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Dangers of Self-Indulgence.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Destruction Through Indulgence.

Our lesson is a temperance lesson and applies to other things than indulgence in intoxicating liquors. Our age is intoxicated with the love of pleasure, pursuit of gain, and various kinds of self-ambition.

I. Israel's Reckless Security (vv. 1-3).

They were blind to the perils that surrounded them. They trusted in the mountains of Samaria for their protection. They regarded their city as impregnable. They seemed to have regarded the utterances of Amos as the dreams of a fanatic. The same blunders are being made in America by those who are depending upon money and armaments instead of righteousness as the national defense.

II. Israel's Extreme Luxury (vv. 4-6).

Periods of prosperity are always characterized by luxury. The luxury of Israel expressed itself in:

1. Extravagant furniture (v. 4). They had beds of ivory—perhaps wood inlaid with ivory. 2. Indolence (v. 4). Many lazily stretched themselves on their couches—lived lives of indolence. Such is the way of many in America today.

3. Feasted on delicacies (v. 4). The implication here is that they had their dainties out of season. They bought what they desired, regardless of what it cost.

4. Adorned their feasts with music (v. 5). They sang idle songs—even invented musical instruments for this purpose. How like the times in which we live! By means of the radio, vulgar and even licentious sentiments are carried to our ears through the noble art of music.

5. They drank wine (v. 6). They were not satisfied with ordinary drinking vessels—they drank from bowls, indicating excessive drinking. They were so mastered by the intoxicating cup that their feasts which were adorned with the refinement of music ended in drunken debauchery.

III. Israel's Failure to Grieve for Joseph (v. 6).

Joseph here stands for Ephraim and Manasseh, his two sons. Ephraim became the principal tribe of the northern kingdom, so Joseph is used as a synonym for the nation.

IV. The Inevitable Consequence (vv. 7-11).

1. They shall go into captivity (v. 7). The northern kingdom was the first in sin and therefore first to go into captivity.

2. The calamitous circumstances of the siege of Samaria (vv. 8-11). The city with all its inhabitants was to be delivered up to its enemies.

a. Israel, the first in rank as well as first in numbers and power, went first into captivity.

b. Their revelry to cease (v. 7). There was to be a rude awakening from their drunken carousals.

c. God's judgment upon the city in strange contrast to his love for Jacob (v. 8). Men, women, and children went into captivity at the hands of the Assyrians.

d. The surety of God's commandment (v. 11). The destruction was to be universal. The rich and the poor, the large and the small were included. God has sworn that his judgments shall fail. He is a God of justice. He is also the God of hosts, the controller of the whole universe, therefore none can escape. Though God sometimes waits long, he does not forget.

V. Israel's Ridiculous Conduct Exposed (vv. 12-14).

1. It was as absurd as plowing upon a rock with oxen. Their hard hearts were as unresponsive to the call of God as rocks are to the plow of the farmer (v. 12).

2. Their boasted power as a nation (v. 13). Outwardly the nation was characterized by great wealth and splendor. This all was to pass away with the stroke of divine judgment.

3. A nation raised up against them (v. 14). God raised up the Assyrian nation to punish Israel. The very fortified cities which they boasted of, Amos tells, would be taken away and used against them.

Nearness

Nearness of life to the Saviour will necessarily involve greatness of love to him. As nearness to the sun increases the temperature of the various planets, so near and intimate communion with Jesus rates the heat of the soul's affections toward him.—Spurgeon.

New Invention Eliminates Changing Dials on Radio to Hear Various Programs

A robot radio which tunes itself on and off different stations, according to a pre-selected schedule, starting and stopping and changing programs automatically over a twelve-hour period, has been perfected by A. Atwater Kent, radio engineer and manufacturer.

Once set, the robot or tuneomatic radio provides any combination of programs desired, and after turning itself off at night will go back on again in the morning and serve as an alarm clock. It looks like any other large all-wave radio except for an electric clock set into the front panel. While the mechanism is described as a complicated problem in radio engineering achievement, the operation is simple.

A series of small holes around the edge of the clock's face mark the quarter hour periods and serve as connecting channels between the time clock arrangement and the tuning mechanism. The latter has sixteen outlets in the form of miniature telephone switchboard cords, two to each of seven stations and providing for fourteen different program periods, with two extra cords for intermission periods. The cords are plugged into the holes at the desired program periods, and the radio then operates automatically, shifting from station to station and program to program, stopping itself and starting again exactly as scheduled. If the self-tuning mechanism is not turned on, it operates like any other radio.

Inventions to Forward Period of Prosperity

The stage is set for the noblest prosperity in all history, says a writer in an eastern magazine. Thousands of inventions await us. A queer new tube is ready to displace tens of millions of dollars' worth of electrical equipment and cut in half the cost of transmitting power. Sugar added to cement more than doubles its strength; thus tomorrow's buildings will rise more cheaply and better.

Strange alloys are on hand for reducing the weight of trains, autos and airplanes. Automotive engineers say that, if the producers wished, they could double the lives of their cars at a slight increase of cost. The list of precious improvements on hand but still unused is almost endless—and infuriating.

The reason they are not available now is that nobody can be sure that people stand ready to foot the bill.

The art of making things has been perfected, chiefly through advances in physics and chemistry. Its technicians are those of the engineer. But the art of analyzing people's wishes and then influencing them to use things is still on the level of the camp-meeting evangelist. Its exponents employ the sawdust trail, ballyhoo and incantations.

Imperishable Records

Indestructible records of picturesque and historic places in England are being preserved for future generations by printing etchings on clay, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. After the clay is fired and glazed, the etchings are printed on the tiles, each of which is 6½ inches by 5½ inches. A new method makes possible the production of strong line and delicate color.

Shaft Would Have Value

It is strange that an expedition into the earth's interior has never been seriously attempted. If we could sink a shaft only twelve miles into the ground we might strike all the coal and oil that would be needed in millions of years. In all likelihood we should find radium, gold, silver, diamonds, and other gems of untold wealth, as well as wonderful new metals and fresh sources of energy. Exchange.

Joseph Fulton and family of Indianapolis, Indiana and the former mother from California have been visiting at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Moriarty this week.

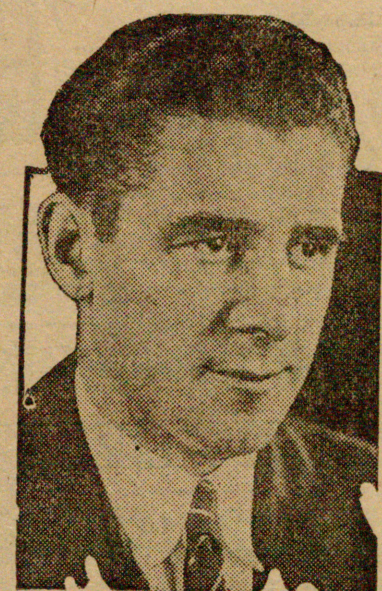

Mrs. Sadie Barbor has been visiting in New Lenox the past week.

George Walsh was given another blood transfusion Thursday, his father John Walsh being the donor. George continues very weak.

George Megarry has been spending a few days in Chicago with Jack Horras.

Finney's Creator

Ted O'Loughlin, who draws the comic strip "Finney of the Force," which readers of this paper enjoy so much every week, might be a railroad man today instead of the widely known artist that he is, had it not been for the fact that when he was holding down a job as a way-bill clerk in the freight department of the Pennsylvania railroad in Philadelphia, his boss' likeness in grotesque caricature made its appearance on too many way-bills. Within a year the budding artist found his career as a railroad man cut short and he was precipitated into the work for which his later success proved he was particularly fitted.

TED O'LOUGHLIN

Now only thirty years of age, Mr. O'Loughlin had quite an extensive experience in various lines of endeavor even before his brief tenure of service with the Pennsylvania railroad.

Christened "Edward A. J.," his nickname was conferred by a stuttering aunt who could not say "Ed." Like many other successful men, he began his business career as a newsboy. Later, during the summer vacations, he served successively as office boy, a printer's devil and a jack-of-all-trades. The summer of 1918 found him working in a clothing mill, but this did not last long, for by August of the same year he was in the "World's greatest wartime shipyard"—Hog Island—a passer-boy, being the medium by which red-hot rivets were passed from the heater to the holder-on.

At the death of his father in 1919, the future artist left high school and became the "breadwinner" of the family as a telegraph messenger boy. From this he advanced to the railroad job from which he was to be soon separated because of the itch to caricature, which he could not suppress.

Six months after he was "bump," in the language of railroad workers, he embarked upon his life work as a newspaper man and artist. He was employed at different times on most of the dailies of Philadelphia and Camden, N. J., making layouts, retouching and doing sports cartoons. From this it was but a step to the comic strip field and he has made a name for himself among the younger cartoonists of the country through his portrayal of "Finney of the Force."

TINLEY PARK

A strange driver missed the turn in the road on Oak Park avenue at Goeseville one night the past week and ran off the pavement, the car upsetting, but so far as could be learned no one was hurt.

Ferd Parenti of Tinley Park figured in an auto accident Saturday night when he collided with a Canadian car at 159th and Oak Park avenue. A woman passenger in the Canadian car suffered leg injuries.

Mr. Parenti was not hurt. Tinley has a new Kittenball team and they are real go getters. The other night they played a local subdivision team and defeated them with a score of 20 to 3. The new team is anxious to book games.

Mrs. Lizzie Koehler of Morgan Park has been visiting with Mrs. Brodthun for a few days. James Durkee formerly connected with the Tinley Park radio station, now of Bartelsville, Oklahoma arrived here Sunday afternoon and has been staying with Police Chief Harry Uthe.

Mr. Durkee is consulting engineer for the Philips Petroleum Company and Chief Engineer for the Western Radio and Telegraph.

Mr. Durkee says that during the recent heat wave Bartelsville had 115 degrees in the shade for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Vogt have gone to Wisconsin on a few weeks vacation trip.

The summer school of the Zion Lutheran church closed August 17. Rev. Ernest Barkow of Swanville, Minnesota is visiting with Rev. and Mrs. Albert Buddenhagen and family. He is the brother of Mrs. Buddenhagen's brother.

Born to Mrs. H. Beazley, a son. Mr. and Mrs. Omar C. Ebenhack have as their guest this week Mrs. Ebenhack's sister Miss Marjorie Cathcart of Bronson, Michigan. They are planning a boat trip to St. Joseph Friday to visit friends.

The Garden Circle of the Tinley Park Woman's Club held their August meeting at the home of Mrs. Potthberg.

The flowers which were chosen for this month were a dwarf Cockscomb, Petunia and Zinnia, brought by Mrs. Chapman, Mrs. Stover and Mrs. Potthberg.

A very interesting talk on "The Japanese Way of Flowers" was given by Mrs. Ebenhack after which each took their turn in arranging the flowers. Lovely refreshments were served by Mrs. Potthberg.

The Little Red Hen

The old red hen who heard him, Did not whimper or complain, She had gone thru lots of dry spells And had lived thru floods of rain; So she flew upon the grindstone And gave her claws a whet, She said, "I have never seen the time There weren't some worms to get."

She picked a new and undug spot, The earth was hard and firm, The rooster jeered, "New ground, That's no place for a worm." But the old hen just spread her feet And dug fast and free, She clucked, "I've got to go to the worms For the worms won't come to me."

The rooster vainly spent his time Thru habit, in the old ways, On ground where big fat worms Were found back in the good days. When evening found him supperless, He groaned in accents rough—"I'm hungry as a fowl can be, Gee, conditions sure are tough."

But the old red hen flew on her perch And snuggled down to sleep, Then said, in a contented tone, "Hear this, young man and weep, I'm full of worms and I'm happy, I've dined both long and well; The worms are there as always, But I had to dig like hell!" —Egan So. Dakota Express

How Old Is Your Furnace?

There is no other piece of operating equipment in your home or your business that gives you as many hours of service for so little cost of upkeep as your furnace.

Do you realize that your furnace operates continually day and night for seven to eight months each year, that it is a machine that needs attention and care just the same as any piece of mechanical equipment. Have you noticed excessive dust and dirt through the registers, or even in extreme cases the spreading of deadly carbon monoxide gas through out the home?

No piece of machinery can be kept in constant use without an occasional overhauling.

Neither can a furnace operate successfully over a long period of years unless it is completely taken down and re-cemented at least once every six or eight years.

To insure clean fresh air in your home and keep your fuel bill at minimum we will give you a complete reset job for $11

THIS SERVICE INCLUDES THE FOLLOWING WORK:

We take off casing and completely dismantle furnace. Chip and brush out all old cement. Srape and clean all casing joints and reset with rutland cement. Restrip all casing joints with heavy asbestos paper. Clean smoke pipe and base of chimney. Re-cement smoke pipe in chimney. Clean warm air and cold air pipes. Re-paint front of furnace adjust regulator chains. Sweep up and remove all dirt around furnace.

Who Says
That Nobody
Loves a Policeman?

There is one thing sure... that isn't true so far, at least, as Officer Finney is concerned.

You know Finney—Finney of the Force—whose comical adventures are portrayed for readers of this paper by Ted O'Loughlin, brilliant young artist.

This genial copper gets a lot of fun out of the things that happen day by day as he travels his beat, and the fun is passed on to you as you read of his activities.

Have a laugh with Finney and tell your friends about him.

Building Character
You, yourself, have forged every painful fetter that binds you today. You, yourself, have sowed the seed of all nobility and beauty that blossoms in your heart.—Annie Besant.
